Testimonials:

"My experience at Chadbourne & Parke could not have been better, as I was able to gain a lot of exposure actively participating in several deals. I was able to work closely with the Latin American group, as well as joining several local deals (which is not as common for a visiting attorney). One of the most interesting aspects of the firm is the close contact with professionals from the offices all around the world and the strong international network that a visiting attorney is able to build.

The team I got to work with is filled with great attorneys which are not only demanding a strong professional commitment, but were also eager to improve my experience and teach me the peculiarities of being a part of a major international firm. Their patience and knowledge were key attributes that contributed to my professional growth throughout the year and I am very thankful for that." - 2011 International Intern

"There are many factors that make Chadbourne a great place to work. First is trust. Partners assign you relevant responsibilities from the first day, which encourages you to give your best every day. The second is a high-profile international practice. Personally, I have been involved in big, complex international arbitration cases. This has sharpened my theoretical and practical skills as well as my perspective about how the international dispute resolution world actually works. The third is the cultural experience. Being in contact with lawyers from many countries shows you that the way foreign lawyers think about law depends on their own legal traditions, where each one has something to teach. Law school does not give you such a possibility. The fourth is the human capital. Working with good people develops personal commitment, which is a key factor for the daily work. All this and more happens at Chadbourne". - 2011 International Intern

"My experience at Chadbourne has been more than I expected. Not only have I had the opportunity to participate in high profile transactions with more than just a mere involvement but with an active participation, but I have been able to work with extraordinary people and professionals with different backgrounds and points of view. It is indeed an international experience. I believe that, compared to other similar programs, Chadbourne offers a unique balance between work and personal experience, with an exposure to clients and lawyers that is rarely seen. In that sense, the professional and personal experience I have gained during my stay at Chadbourne would be invaluable to my development as a lawyer and as a person". - 2011 International Intern

"I joined Chadbourne after completing my LL.M. degree from Columbia University, and from my first day at Chadbourne, I have been involved in a broad array of transactions, with a very active participation in all of them. I have had the opportunity to work together with different partners, who have always been deeply involved in each and every transaction, thoroughly reviewing even the most minor details. I have committed most of my time to the Latin American Practice group, where I believe that Chadbourne has one of the most well-known practices, representing many of the key players from the region". "I was immediately struck by Chadbourne's commitment to being a global law firm. Not only has it established offices in several countries - with a remarkable presence in emerging markets -, but most matters are staffed with attorneys from various jurisdictions. I have enjoyed extensive contact with professionals from the UK, Argentina, Poland, Mexico, Russia, Colombia, Turkey and Chile, to name a few, and have taken a lot from the experience. Chadbourne has developed a very strong international network and maintains close relations with leading law firms throughout the world. My time at Chadbourne has definitely broadened my perspective on the legal profession and will have a lasting positive impact on my career." - 2008 International Intern
